The Artist Says:—

10 Cents

I am a portrait painter. When I paint a man's picture I give him "Helmar" Turkish cigarettes to smoke. "Helmar" puts the natural happy expression on his face, and keeps it there. I smoke "Helmar" and so does nearly every artist I know. "Helmars" are artistically fine.

The mildest tobacco for cigarettes is Turkish.

The best tobacco for cigarettes is Turkish.

Don't pay ten cents for anybody's cigarette until you have tried "Helmar," a fascinating, elevating, gentlemen's smoke.

MAKES ROUND IN 39. Larry Clarke Hugs Up a New Record On Country Club Links.

Larry Clarke, member of the Franklin, Mass. Golf club, hugging up a new record for the nine-hole course at the Putnam Country club, Wednesday afternoon, making the round in 39. Mr. Clarke was the guest of his brother, Tom Clarke, green-keeper at the local club, and played around the course. The previous record was 41. This score had been made by Cahill Moohan and Ernest C. Morse, and is best for the course. Par is 37, so Mr. Clarke made the round with only two strokes over perfect play. It is believed that this record will stand for months to come. Players from out of town are enthusiastic over the natural beauties and hazards of the course. Little has had to be done in the way of furnishing artificiality as the course contains jolla, two brooks, a swamp and a pond, woods, and tall grass making the course a difficult one, or, as golfers say, "sporty."

INCAS REVEALED

Ruins Discovered by Prof. Bingham After Being Lost for Generations. (Special to The Bulletin.)

Washington, D. C., July 28.—Amazing and laboriously interesting facts concerning the builders of the wonderful city of Machu Picchu, the ancient Incas, are given in a communication to the National Geographic Expedition of 1915, sent out by the Society and Yale University. The ruins of this great center of a vanished civilization were discovered by Professor Bingham and his party after they had been lost for generations. Some of the ruins of the Incas, as they are called, were discovered by the National Geographic Society, are given in a bulletin of the expedition, which was published in the National Geographic magazine in Washington.

The builders of Machu Picchu, writes Professor Bingham, had an elaborate system of highways throughout this little-known and almost unexplored country, which lies between the Andean Valley and the Apurimac. This region was densely populated, and Machu Picchu was its capital.

Lack of timber, the prevalence of heavy rains during part of the year, the ease with which stone might be procured, early led to the development of stone as a building material. Strength and permanence were secured by the use of the keying together of irregular blocks. The upper and lower surfaces of these stones were frequently convex or concave, the convexity of one stone approximating the concavity of the adjoining stone. In constructing their walls the Incas used not only the keying together of several ingenious devices, such as "lock-holes" for fastening the back of a stone to the wall, but also the use of stone cylinders, which could be used as points to which to tie the roof and keep it from blowing off.

Their pottery is marked by simple and graceful lines, bearing a striking resemblance to that of ancient Greece, and resembling its simplicity and utility some of the modern vessels still present in use in Peruvian kitchens.

Due to the extreme moisture of the climate, the remains of cloth are very few; but we know that the Incas people actually did arrive at a high degree of skill in the manufacture of textiles through their ability to procure the wool of the alpaca. By the use of hand looms artistic and intricate patterns were produced and cloth of the most delicate texture was not uncommon. Their metal articles were easily preserved, and so we have been able to learn that the people of Machu Picchu were extremely skillful makers of bronze.

"Their surgical tools were probably of bronze or obsidian. Surgery appears to have been practiced to a considerable degree, if one may judge by the large number of trepanned skulls that we have found in caves within a radius of 25 miles of Machu Picchu. In some cases the cause of the operation on the lower jawbone also were found. In others evidence leads to the conclusion that the operation was intended to relieve pain caused by wounds received in battle. Since the favorite weapon of the Inca people was the sling, and slings were common, it is not surprising that the skulls of many soldiers should have needed the relief that came from skillful trepanning. In the art of war they exhibit skill in defense more than in offense. Fortifications constructed with salient and reentrant angles so as to admit of lateral fire were not uncommon.

"They had no machinery and did not use iron or steel. They used levers and inclined planes. They also made huge three ropes out of which they constructed long suspension bridges. They thought nothing of handling blocks of stone weighing five tons and huge three ropes out of which they constructed long suspension bridges. They thought nothing of handling blocks of stone weighing five tons and huge three ropes out of which they constructed long suspension bridges. They thought nothing of handling blocks of stone weighing five tons and huge three ropes out of which they constructed long suspension bridges.

OFFICIAL STATEMENT

BY ITALIAN WAR OFFICE

Tells of Fruitless Attacks by Austrians in Various Sections.

Rome, July 27, via London, 7.45 p. m.—The official statement given out by the war office today reads:

"Yesterday on several sections of the front the enemy's artillery was particularly active against towns and villages in the Asiago basin, the upper Dolomite and Degano valleys. Some places on the lower Isonzo also were bombarded. The damage was slight and only a few victims are reported.

"In the Val Arsa and at the head of the Forno valley on the night of the 25th the enemy attempted an attack on our position on the right bank of the Leno torrent and on the slopes of Corro del Coston. On the Tonza plateau the enemy is stubbornly resisting our advance in strongly entrenched positions in the woods north of Monte Cimone. Yesterday, however, we succeeded in making some progress in the Trivium valley enemy artillery is active against our new positions.

"The remainder of the front is unchanged."
